A social enterprise is celebrating serving Slough for five years.

A host of politicians, community leaders and practitioners, including Slough MP Fiona Mactaggart and Mayor of Slough, Cllr Chrissy Small, joined Slough-based Creative Junction for the anniversary celebrations on Monday at the West Wing Arts Centre in Stoke Road.

Since Creative Junction started working in Slough its projects have reached more than half a million children and young people.

The arts and learning organisation showcased some of their work on the day.

Guests enjoyed the lunch and a birthday cake, young people provided entertainment and performances of the work they had completed over the summer.
